The cathedral was packed to the doors with an immense crowd of men when the service was opened with the recitation of the rosary, which was followed by the sermon. Father Gregory, the preacher, is a young man with a splendid physique and a face cast in the heroic mould. He has a deep and powerful voice that found its way into the farthest recesses of the cathedral. His whole sermon was based on the necessity of his listeners living up to the high resolves and promises of betterment made by them during the mistion. He pointed out in beginning that the whole Christian faith is founded upon a belief in immortality, and told of the glorious reward in store for those who keep that faith during their life

Home Beyond the Grave. This beautiful world, he said, was prepared by God as the abode not only f the just, but of the unjust also. If the sinner is provided with such a habitation, what must not the home prepared for those who love God be like? Man cannot do without heaven, he said, and no matter what men may say about believing, everyone deep down in their hearts has faith in some iome beyond the grave.

Christ told men, "Be thou faithful unto death," Father Gregory said, and it is incumbent upon every true Christion to keep these words ever before his mind. Men must deny themselves if they would fully attain the purpose "An Honest Man, the Noblest Work for which God created them, he said of God," was the subject of a sermon It is essential that they do violence to reached by Rev.
